Arts Councils & Cultural Centres

As non-profit organizations dedicated to the visual, performing and literary arts, British Columbia's Arts Councils and Cultural Centres are the creative lifeblood of our communities. Their work not only promotes, funds and advocates for local artists and organizations, but also plays a crucial role in artistic education and dialogue. In this edition of BC Arts & Culture Digest, we celebrate four bodies that aim to transform conversations about art, both locally and across the region.

education and exhibition opportunities for members. Within their studio space, participants can attend various workshops and courses on techniques and tools (including acrylics, watercolour & ink, multimedia and more). In addition, the gallery space offers members an opportunity to display and sell original works of art.

KAMLOOPS ARTS COUNCIL

With a mandate to foster the development of local artists, KAC has embarked upon an ambitious event and exhibition schedule to profile the best artistic works from the North Thompson. Among them is 'Crossing Cultures', a powerful exhibit in the KAC's Alcove and Vault galleries on until February 24, 2020. Part of the Crossing Bridges outreach program, the exhibition highlights access to local social services while promoting healing & expression through art.

THE OLD SCHOOL HOUSE ARTS CENTRE

Qualicum Beach

The Old School House Arts Centre (aka TOSH) is a Qualicum Beach institution with a 106 year history. Originally built in 1914, TOSH was purchased by the District 69 Arts Council and opened in 1988. The space includes a public exhibition gallery and arts learning centre, providing arts courses and workshops. TOSH also welcomes visitors to attend a wide range of live music events and visit resident artists working within several of the on-site studios.

VICTORIA ARTS COUNCIL

With over five decades serving their community, the Victoria Arts Council provides education and civic advocacy for the arts through various initiatives, events and exhibitions. In addition to leading programming from their Store Street location in historic downtown Victoria, VAC supports a wide range of exhibition spaces across the provincial capital. Be sure to check out their extensive local artists directory and schedule of events for a wealth arts experiences across the city.
